

Amy Auletto serves as Assistant Director of the Center for Education Efficacy, Excellence, and Equity (E4) at Northwestern University. In this role, she guides and supports research activities at the center, including E4's early career visiting scholar program. Recent E4 projects have focused on the relationship between chronic absenteeism and student learning, the ways in which educators modify students' digital learning experiences, and the role of state- and district-level policies in shaping students' early elementary learning trajectories. Amy received her PhD in education policy from Michigan State University. She works at the intersection of research and practice, with the goal of supporting states and districts to make data-informed decisions. Prior to her doctoral studies, Amy was a middle school math teacher in Detroit.
